Young Refugees

To the Editor:

I applaud the decision of the United States Government to temporarily admit as many as 20,000 refugees from Kosovo to resettle with relatives (news article, April 22). The Government should also consider offering to transport to the United States all young children who have been left without parents and families because of the atrocities.

They should be placed with the thousands of American families who wish to adopt, and if no parent is found after a reasonable period, adoption should be allowed to proceed.
